POPULATION CONTROL

International Standards and China's Coercive Population Policies

During the Commission’s 2018 reporting year, Chinese authorities continued to implement coercive population control policies that violate international standards. The Chinese Communist Party and government authorities implemented for the third year in 2018 the “universal two-child policy” that allows all married couples to have two children. The amended PRC Population and Family Planning Law and provincial-level regulations continued to limit couples’ freedom to build their families as they see fit, and include provisions that require couples to be married to have children and limit them to bearing two children. Exceptions allowing for additional children exist for couples who meet certain criteria, which vary by province, including some exceptions for ethnic minorities, remarried couples, and couples who have children with disabilities. Officials reportedly continued to enforce compliance with family planning policies using methods including heavy fines, job termination, detention, and abortion.

Coercive controls imposed on Chinese women and their families, and additional abuses engendered by China’s population and family planning system, violate standards set forth in the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the 1994 Programme of Action of the Cairo International Conference on Population and Development. China was a state participant in the negotiation and adoption of both. Acts of official coercion committed in the implementation of population control policies contravene provisions of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which China has ratified.

Implementation of the Universal Two-Child Policy and Institutional Developments

The Chinese Communist Party and government implemented the “universal two-child policy” for a third consecutive year in 2018, and government statistics showed that the policy was not effective in spurring population growth. In 2016, the National Health and Family Planning Commission (NHFPC) predicted that the universal two-child policy would result in population growth, with an additional 3 million children born per year and an estimated total of 17.5 to 21 million children born per year during the 13th Five-Year Plan period (2016–2020). According to data released by the National Bureau of Statistics of China (NBS) in January 2018, the number of total births in 2017 was 17.23 million, showing a decline of 630,000 births in comparison to the 2016 figure of 17.86 million.

Population experts warned that the decline in births would continue and expected a 300,000 to 800,000 annual drop in the newborn population over the next 10 years, a trend that could pose a long-term threat to China’s development and may generate a heavier burden on social services due to an aging population and shrinking workforce. Some experts attributed the decline in births to the shrinking number of women of childbearing age and the reluctance on the part of many married couples to have children. Concerns that discouraged couples from having children reportedly included the high cost of rearing a child, lack of adequate child care and education options, lack of time and energy to look after children, and disruption to career development. Population experts and National People’s Congress delegates urged the Chinese government to further relax the existing policy by adopting a three-child policy or ending all birth restrictions, abolish “social compensation fees,” and offer incentives or supporting policies, such as tax breaks and subsidies, to encourage couples to have more children.

During this reporting year, central Party and government officials pledged to strengthen supporting policies that facilitate implementation of family planning policies, and stressed the need for research into population development and evaluation of the universal two-child policy. At the 19th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party held in October 2017, Party General Secretary Xi Jinping promoted the “dovetailing of family planning policies with relevant economic and social supporting policies” and “strengthening strategic research into population development.” Xi also emphasized in his speech the need to “proactively deal with the aging population.” In a detailed January 2018 response to Xi’s speech, Li Bin, then director of the National Health and Family Planning Commission (NHFPC), pledged to “improve population policies to promote balanced population development . . . . Continue to implement well the universal two-child policy to achieve [its] policy effectiveness . . . . Dovetail family planning policies with social and economic supporting policies in taxation, housing, employment, . . . [and] childcare services . . . . Strengthen strategic research into population development by conducting fertility surveys and evaluation of the universal two-child policy, in order to scientifically judge the demographic situation.”

This past year, some local governments introduced supporting policies—including longer paid maternity leave, financial incentives and subsidies, and other benefits—to encourage couples to have a second child.

At the annual meetings of the National People’s Congress (NPC) and Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) in March 2018, central authorities issued a plan to restructure Party and government agencies, including merging the NHFPC and several other agencies to create a new National Health Commission (NHC) under the State Council. According to the restructuring plan, the NHC will assume oversight of responsibilities related to family planning management and services, in addition to managing an aging population and other health-related matters. Some observers suggested that the restructuring plan indicates the central authorities have deemphasized birth control in favor of actively tackling the demographic issue of an aging population. Other observers saw it as an indication that authorities plan to eventually eliminate birth limit policies. This past year, domestic and international news media reported that experts from academic institutions affiliated with the Party and government, as well as a Shaanxi provincial government report on population development, have called for ending the birth limit policies. The NHC reportedly stated that authorities were considering ending the two-child birth limit.
According to a May 2018 Bloomberg News report, central government authorities were considering and may have reached a decision to end birth limit policies due to demographic concerns of a declining birth rate, an aging population, and a shrinking workforce. The report also cited international criticism of the policies as a factor in the decision. Chinese authorities reportedly may replace the existing birth limit policies with one of “independent fertility,” allowing couples to decide for themselves the number of children to have. According to the report, a decision may be announced toward the end of 2018 or in 2019. Demographic experts and other observers, however, commented that a decision to lift all birth limits comes too late and would do little to reverse demographic trends that could have adverse effects on China’s economic development. One American human rights advocate expressed concern that authorities could still coerce unwed mothers to pay large fines or undergo abortions, even if the birth limit policies are abolished. [For more information on the demographic consequences of China’s population control policies, see Demographic Consequences of Population Control Policies later in this section.]

Coercive Implementation

Abuses committed during the implementation of family planning policies continued during the Commission’s 2018 reporting year. The amended PRC Population and Family Planning Law contains provisions that prohibit officials from infringing upon the “legitimate rights and interests” of citizens while implementing family planning policies. Some provincial-level population planning regulations and local government authorities, however, continued to explicitly instruct officials to carry out abortions, often referred to as “remedial measures” (bujiu cuoshi), for illegal pregnancies.

OFFICIAL CAMPAIGNS

During this reporting year, official speeches and government reports from provinces across China—including Anhui, Fujian, Guangdong, Hubei, Hunan, and Sichuan—continued to promote implementation of harsh and invasive family planning measures. Some local government authorities placed an emphasis on birth limits and adherence to family planning as a “basic national policy” and stressed the need to “maintain a low birth level.” Other official reports emphasized the need to strictly control and punish illegal births and implement “remedial measures” to address illegal pregnancies. Some local authorities imposed targets, instructed family planning officials to carry out the invasive “three inspections” (intrauterine device (IUD), pregnancy, and health inspections) and “four procedures” (IUD insertion, first-trimester abortion, mid- to late-term abortion, and sterilization), and demanded the collection of “social compensation fees” (shehui fuyang fei). In one example, a government report from Longhui county, Shaoyang municipality, Hunan, indicated that as of December 6, 2017, county authorities had carried out 290 “birth-control” operations during the winter of 2017—204 IUD insertions, 19 sterilizations, and 67 abortions. County authorities also collected nearly 2.76 million yuan (approximately US$437,000) in “social compensation fees.”

PUNISHMENT FOR NONCOMPLIANCE

Chinese authorities continued to use various methods of punishment to enforce citizens’ compliance with population planning policies. In accordance with national-level legal provisions, local regulations and governments have directed officials to punish non-compliance through heavy fines, termed “social compensation fees,” which reportedly compel women to choose between undergoing an unwanted abortion and incurring a fine often much greater than the average annual income in localities across China. This past year, Chinese citizens continued to file administrative lawsuits against family planning agencies pertaining to the collection of “social compensation fees” from married couples who gave birth to a second child in violation of previous family planning policies and birth limits. In recent years, population experts and observers have repeatedly called on government authorities to abolish “social compensation fees.”

In addition to fines, officials imposed or threatened other punishments for family planning violations. These punishments included job termination, detention, and forced abortion. The PRC Population and Family Planning Law prohibits, and provides punishments for, officials’ infringement on citizens’ personal, property, and other rights while implementing family planning policies.

<td>Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (XUAR). According to two February 2018 ChinaAid Association (ChinaAid) reports, on January 5, 2018, family planning authorities in Burultoqay (Fuhai) county, Altay (Aletai) district, Ili (Yili) Kazakh Autonomous Prefecture, XUAR, detained ethnic Kazakh woman Kuliziya Mogudong for bearing a child in excess of birth quotas and forced her to undergo an abortion at a local hospital. Authorities subsequently released Mogudong after the procedure and confiscated her passport and other legal documents. A week later, Mogudong returned to the hospital due to physical weakness and nervousness. After about 10 days, Mogudong asked to be released, but authorities denied her request, saying she had tuberculosis. According to a May 2018 ChinaAid report, Mogudong remained in “soft detention” at her home until May 8, when authorities permitted Mogudong to leave for Kazakhstan to reunite with her husband Oman Anshakhan. Local public security officials also detained Mogudong’s two older brothers—including Tursun, a local imam, on January 27—at unknown locations. As of May 2018, Mogudong’s brothers remained in detention. Anshakhan, a naturalized citizen of Kazakhstan, said he and Mogudong had not violated China’s family planning policies.</td>

<td>Guangdong province. According to December 2017 reports by state-funded news media The Paper and Party-run media Global Times, authorities in Guangzhou municipality, Guangdong, determined that a local government official surnamed Xiong had violated family planning policies and threatened to expel him from the Chinese Communist Party and terminate his job. In November 2015, Xiong’s wife gave birth to their second child in the United States, before the universal two-child policy became effective in January 2016. The couple reported the birth of the second child to their respective employers after they had returned to China in 2016. Xiong’s employer referred the case to the Guangzhou Municipal Health and Family Planning Commission, which determined in January and September 2017 that the second child was born in violation of family planning laws and policies. The Guangzhou Municipal Discipline Inspection Commission further determined that Xiong should be expelled from the Party and be dismissed from his job, in accordance with national and provincial provisions. As of December 11, 2017, Xiong was still waiting for a final decision to be issued regarding this case. In response to concerns that some local provisions mandating job termination for excess births violated national laws, the Legislative Affairs Commission of the National People’s Congress Standing Committee issued a statement in September 2017 urging seven provinces, including Guangdong, to amend their local family planning regulations. As of April 2018, some provincial authorities had amended their family planning regulations accordingly, while others indicated that they had plans to do so.</td>

- Hebei province. According to an April 2018 Wall Street Journal report, in or around March 2018, a high school teacher surnamed Sun—who had discovered that she was pregnant with a third child in March—in Tangshan municipality, Hebei, contacted the local family planning agency to inquire whether a third child was allowed in light of the central Party and government authorities’ March 2018 restructuring plan to create the new National Health Commission. The local family planning agency reportedly indicated that a third child was still not allowed, and as a government worker, Sun would be fined and probably be dismissed from her job for violating family planning policies. A few days after the phone call, Sun reportedly terminated the pregnancy by swallowing a pill.

Demographic Consequences of Population Control Policies

Decades of population control policies have exacerbated China’s demographic challenges, which include a rapidly aging population, shrinking workforce, and sex ratio imbalance. Affected in recent decades by government restrictions on the number of births per couple, China’s total fertility rate has dropped from approximately 3 births per woman in the late 1970s to an estimated 1.6 births per woman in 2017, below the replacement rate of 2.1 births per woman necessary to maintain a stable population. A U.S.-based Chinese demographer estimated that the 2017 fertility rate may have been as low as 1.24 births per woman. The fertility rate is even lower in some major cities, such as Shanghai municipality, which has had a fertility rate of approximately 0.7 births per woman for several years, reportedly one of the lowest in the world.

China’s low fertility rate has contributed to a rapidly aging population and a shrinking workforce. According to the National Bureau of Statistics of China (NBS), from 2016 to 2017, China’s working-age population (persons between the ages of 16 and 59) declined by 5.48 million people to 901.99 million, continuing a downward trend for a sixth consecutive year. During the same period, the elderly population (persons aged 60 or older) increased by 10.04 million in 2017 to 240.90 million people, or 17.3 percent of the total population. According to the State Council National Population Development Plan (2016–2030), China’s working-age population is expected to decline rapidly from 2021 to 2030, while the elderly population will increase markedly during the same period and is predicted to reach a quarter of the population by 2030. Some observers suggested that the elderly population would account for approximately one-third of China’s total population by 2050. These demographic trends reportedly may burden China’s health care, social services, and pension systems, and weaken China’s economy.

The Chinese government’s restrictive family planning policies also have exacerbated China’s sex ratio imbalance. Although Chinese authorities continued to implement a ban on “non-medically necessary sex determination and sex-selective abortion,” some people reportedly continued the practice in keeping with a tradi-
According to a January 2018 NBS report, China’s overall sex ratio in 2017 was 104.81 males to 100 females, and there were approximately 32.66 million more males than females in China (711.37 million males to 678.71 million females). The NBS reported that the sex ratio at birth (SRB) in 2015 was 113.51 males to 100 females, but it did not provide statistics on the SRB for 2016 and 2017 during which the universal two-child policy was implemented. Demographic experts have expressed concerns that the sex ratio imbalance in China could lead to “violent crime,” “sex crimes,” “trafficking of women,” and “social instability.” This past year, international media reports continued to suggest a link between China’s sex ratio imbalance and the trafficking of foreign women—from countries including Burma (Myanmar), Cambodia, North Korea, and Vietnam—into China for forced marriage or commercial sexual exploitation. [For more information on cross-border trafficking, see Section II—Human Trafficking.]

Reports also indicate that decades of birth limits under China’s population control policies combined with a traditional preference for sons may have encouraged a black market for illegal adoptions. In January 2018, the Maoming Municipal Intermediate People’s Court in Guangdong province sentenced 18 people for “child trafficking” and 8 others for “buying a trafficked child.” According to reports, the trafficking ring acquired infants in Funing county, Wenshan Zhuang and Miao Autonomous Prefecture, Yunnan province, and other locations, and sold them for 73,000 yuan to 98,000 yuan (approximately US$11,600 to $15,555). Despite government efforts to combat “child trafficking,” illegal adoptions reportedly continued to occur, and the problem appeared to have worsened in recent years. [For inconsistencies in the definition of “child trafficking” between Chinese law and international standards, see Section II—Human Trafficking.]
